SPORTS IN AMERICA: COLLEGES & UNIVERSITIES

by James A. Michener

The athletic programs of American colleges and universities have come in for a great deal of criticism but there does not seem to be a chance to alter the system.

James A. Michener gives background information and comments on the problems.

First, the United States is the only nation in the world, so far as I know, which demands that its schools like Harvard, Ohio State and Claremont assume (1) Ours is a unique system which has (2) It would be unthinkable for the University of Bologna, a most ancient and honorable school, to provide scholarships to illiterate soccer players so that they could entertain the other cities of northern Italy, and it (3) to do so in their countries. Our system is an American phenomenon, (4) by Yale and Harvard and to a lesser extent Princeton and certain other schools during the closing years of the nineteenth century. If we had had at that time professional teams which provided public football entertainment, we (5) But we had no professional teams, so our schools were handed the job.

Second, if an ideal American educational system were being launched afresh, few would want to saddle it with the responsibility for public sports entertainment. I certainly would not. But since, by a quirk of history, it is so saddled, the tradition has become ingrained and I (6) I therefore approve of continuing it, so long as certain safeguards are installed. Categorically, I believe that our schools must continue to offer sports entertainment, even though (7)

Third, I see nothing wrong in having a college or a university provide training for the young man or woman (8) My reasoning is twofold: (1) American society has ordained that sports shall be a major aspect of our national life, (9) How possibly can a major aspect of life be ignored by our schools? (2) If it is permissible to train young musicians and actors in our universities, and endow munificent departments to do so, (10) ?

Fourth, because our schools have volunteered to serve as unpaid training grounds for future professionals, and (11) from the semi-professional football and basketball teams they operate, the temptation to recruit young men skilled at games but totally unfitted for academic work is overpowering. We must seriously ask if (12) There are honorable answers, (13) , but if we do not face this matter forthrightly, we are going to run into trouble.

- A) a historical accident which developed from the exciting football games played
- B) with major attention, major financial support and major coverage in the media
- C) no historical sanction or application elsewhere
- D) see not the remotest chance of altering it
- E) would be equally preposterous for either the Sorbonne or Oxford
- F) why is it not equally legitimate to train young athletes, and endow them with a stadium
- G) comparable institutions throughout the rest of the world are excused from doing so
- H) because some of the lucky schools with good sports reputations can earn a good deal of money
- I) responsibility for providing the public with sports entertainment
- J) such behavior is legitimate for an academic institution
- K) who wants to devote his adult life to sports
- L) might not have placed the burden on our schools
- M) and I know some of them

Task 2. Read the origins of the idioms and try to guess what idiom it is. Write your answers in CAPITAL LETTERS on the separate answer sheet. 1 point for each correct answer

- 23) This idiom is believed to be nautical in nature. When a sailor was feeling ill, he would go beneath the bow, which is the front part of the boat. This would hopefully protect him from adverse conditions, as he was literally under the bad climate conditions that could further sicken him. Therefore, a sailor who was sick, could be described as being “.....”
- 24) There are many theories about the origins of this idiom but one of the most popular is the following, it comes from fairy lore. Many years ago people believed strongly in fairies and would leave offerings and make shrines for them. As this liquid was thought to be the fairies favorite drink, whenever some was spilt in a house it wasn't considered a bad thing or something to worry about as the fairies would drink it!
- 25) It is believed that this idiom comes from an Ancient Greek voting process, where people voted with this kind of edible seed. White seeds (meaning yes) and black or brown seeds (meaning no) were put into a jar by citizens during elections. This idiom means that if someone allows the seeds to fall knocking over the container, the secret results would be revealed too soon. This is why this action is associated with disclosing a secret indiscreetly.
- 26) This idiom is said to come from the 1900s, when buyers could determine this domesticated animal's age by examining its teeth.
- 27) This is an interesting one. While the fourth word in this idiom refers to Lewis Carroll's character in Alice in Wonderland, the expression has its origins in the effects of the chronic mercury poisoning commonly experienced by 18th and 19th century hat manufacturers owing to the use of mercurous nitrate in felt hats.
- 28) This expression refers to the stops inside a pipe organ. They control the loudness and the tones of the instrument. Without them, one can play louder. When the set of organ pipes of a particular tone and range of pitch is moved out, it allows the organ to play all sounds at once and be as loud as possible.
- 29) In the 14th century during a post-hunt feast, the lord of the manor would eat the finest cuts of meat. The numbles was the name given to the heart, liver, and entrails of animals. By the 15th century this was shortened to 'umbles. It was common practice for people of lower stature to be humiliated when served the 'umbles baked into a pie. Thus, comes the term, '.....'.

PART 3. WRITING
Maximum: 25 points

You have seen the following competition entry in a magazine:

HERO OF THE YEAR!

A local film studio is going to make a film about people who have demonstrated great courage at work. We decided to ask the school students to tell us what occupation could be shown in the film. Who would you nominate for the film?

Write your entry for the competition in 180-250 words.

- You have to persuade the readers why your entry deserves considering.
- Remember to write the introduction and conclusion!
- Provide 2 reasons why you think people of this profession deserve to be shown in the film (you need to provide well-developed and well-structured arguments).
- Tell what other traits of character apart from courage people of this profession must have.
- Use the following quotation in your entry: ‘A hero is no braver than an ordinary man, but he is brave five minutes longer’. (Ralph Waldo Emerson)
- Use two idioms and two phrasal verbs in your competition entry.
