He wanted to design some software to help find lost pets, but he didn't enough about technology. Scientists at the University of Utah helped him make an app called 'Finding Rover', which people can download their phones. There are a other apps like John's, but they all work in a similar way. First of, the owner takes a photo of his or her pet facing the camera. Then they upload the photo onto the app and type in the postcode. If the dog goes missing, the app prints a digital poster an interactive map. When finds a lost dog, they take a photo and upload it with their postcode, so that a 'Found Dog' poster appears. Since the app began, hundreds of dog owners found their lost pets while they were connected to their smart phones.
